UConn Law School students interning with the Office of the Attorney General and in the Office of the Governor.
Learn from distinguished scholars how the law touches virtually every aspect of our lives. Many of our professors hold, in addition to their law degrees, advanced degrees in fields ranging from architecture to philosophy and many have written leading textbooks in their subject areas. A diverse body of adjunct faculty, drawn from the judiciary, corporations and private practice, augments the expertise of the full-time faculty. Students get to know and exchange ideas freely with all of them, thanks to a low student-faculty ratio and small classes.

TEACHING AND MENTORSHIP

UConn Law faculty hold doctorates in Economics, English Literature, European History, History, Jurisprudence and Social Policy, Philosophy, Political Science, Politics, and Social Anthropology.

The stately UConn Law campus is set in the historic West End of Hartford, midway between New York and Boston and 28 miles from the university’s main campus in Storrs. The vibrant center of West Hartford lies two miles to the west and the shops, restaurants, museums and theaters of downtown Hartford are just two miles to the east.

CITY LIFE

Connecticut’s historic capital city is alive with arts, culture, new ideas and projects. It’s the center of the state legislature and court system, a nexus of the insurance industry and home to the prestigious Wadsworth Atheneum, the nation’s oldest public art museum, and expansive Bushnell Park, its first public park. Opportunities for interdisciplinary studies are growing at the University’s Graduate Business Learning Center and a new downtown Hartford campus, both within a few miles of the law school.

CAMPUS LIFE

The classrooms and offices at UConn Law are spread among five Gothic Revival buildings, including one of the largest law libraries in the world, on a tranquil 17-acre campus in Hartford’s West End. Inside, students find cutting-edge classroom technology, top-notch research facilities, two courtrooms and a multitude of comfortable spaces for conversing and studying. The law school extends its warm community spirit beyond campus with a lively calendar of conferences, symposia, lectures and social events for students, alumni and the public.
UConn Law Career Planning Center is available to assist students in developing the professional knowledge and skills necessary for them to build rewarding careers. The staff firmly believes that legal careers are not "one size fits all." The professional staff and career counselors works closely with every student to create personalized career plans. All students are strongly encouraged to take advantage of the one-on-one counseling services, the multitude of networking opportunities and the various professional programs offered by the Career Planning Center during their time in law school.

BY THE NUMBERS

93.8% of the class of 2016 were employed 10 months after graduation.

50+ employers held on-campus interviews in Fall 2016.
The growing UConn Law alumni network spans all 50 states, plus the District of Columbia, and more than 50 nations around the world. You will find our graduates working in every field of the law, in law firms large and small, corporations, small businesses, government, education and the nonprofit sector.

A FEW INTERESTING EXAMPLES:

As an attorney at Pierce Atwood LLP in Boston, Nicholas Brown of the UConn Law Class of 2009 helps businesses resolve disputes in state and federal courts. For his pro bono work representing refugee children, the Boston Bar Association selected him for its Public Interest Leadership Program.

After graduating from UConn School of Law in 1995, Michael Callahan worked in private practice and then moved on to Silicon Valley. He rose to general counsel at Yahoo! before moving to LinkedIn, where he is senior vice president, general counsel and secretary.

After graduating from UConn School of Law in 1991, Andrew McDonald pursued a career in politics and became a leading advocate for LGBTQ rights. He was confirmed as a Connecticut Supreme Court Justice in 2013, the youngest of three UConn Law alumni who serve on the state’s highest court.

Named among “The 50 Most Powerful Women” by Fortune magazine, Kathleen Murphy is president of personal investing for Fidelity Investments in Boston. A 1987 graduate of UConn School of Law, she is a prominent champion for the financial success of women.

As a national justice correspondent for CNN, Jessica Schneider relies on her UConn Law education, as well as her experience working for two New York City law firms. She graduated in 2010.
A legal education represents a significant investment. At UConn School of Law, combining high-quality instruction with small classes, practical training and economical tuition adds up to an exceptional value.

In 2016, U.S. News & World Report compared average student debt to starting salaries and ranked UConn School of Law among the nation’s top 10 “law schools that pay off.”

As a public institution, UConn Law offers a substantial tuition reduction for Connecticut residents. Under the New England Compact, we also discount tuition for residents of Rhode Island and Vermont. In addition, state residency laws allow students from another state to petition after one full year of residency to be reclassified as Connecticut residents, making them eligible for the in-state tuition rate. Out-of-state applicants are urged to learn more about the policy at law.uconn.edu/residency.

UConn School of Law makes admissions decisions throughout the year and notifies applicants as final decisions are made, so we encourage you to apply as early as possible.

THE DEADLINE TO APPLY FOR ADMISSION IS APRIL 30, 2018

Applicants for the JD program must hold or expect to receive a bachelor's degree from an accredited undergraduate college (or the foreign equivalent) and must have taken the Law School Admission Test no more than five years before the date of expected enrollment. No particular undergraduate course of study is required, but an applicant's academic preparation should include substantive courses emphasizing critical reasoning and writing.

As a public institution, UConn School of Law gives special consideration, although not an absolute preference, to residents of Connecticut, with some preference also accorded to residents of Rhode Island and Vermont under the New England Compact.
A UConn Law degree comes with endless possibilities. Earn one and graduate with the skills and knowledge you need to pursue your goals, and enjoy the lifelong support of an extended alumni network to help you succeed throughout your legal career.
